“When you are in the chair, you are framed from the inside out. You can swirl the chair and shift your point of view. That level of control is something you don’t get in a normal lounge chair.”

—Mike and Maaïke

Where does architecture stop and furniture begin? San Francisco design team Mike & Maaïke have taken walls and ceilings and applied them to a single chair to create a room-within-a-room, wrapping around the sitter to create a unique perspective framed by the canopy. Made in the USA, the Windowseat is suitable for both public and private spaces. Designed as a comfortable refuge from busy hotel lobbies, airports or open office environments, the Windowseat offers the sitter a unique perspective one has never been offered before. As office spaces shift toward openness, a place to escape, think, or relax becomes increasingly important.
