Noon, Daybreak, Frost and Haze

The curtain collection consists of four unicoloured curtains: Noon, Daybreak and Frost are transparent, while Haze is translucent. All are based on light conditions associated with the seasons and different times of the day.

Patricia Urquiola and Alfredo Häberli both have developed two textiles for the collection. Whilst all the curtains are made from the same material, each has a unique structure and creates a distinctively individual atmosphere.

As the light conditions change, the colours and structures of the curtains appear to change too. Therefore, the mood they project changes over the course of the day. The palettes for the curtains consist of neutral and natural tones, as well as brighter shades.

All the curtains are designed for mixing and matching. Noon and Daybreak as well as Haze and Frost complement each other especially well as they share colours.

The curtains comply with all relevant fire tests. Particularly well suited to the hospitality segment, they work well in a wide variety of private and commercial spaces.

Noon

Soft and transparent, Noon features subtle stripes. These are in the direction of the weft, so when the curtain is hung, they are vertical. Noon's yarns have been produced with small irregularities, which gives it a natural look.

Daybreak

Daybreak has an open structure and tactile irregularities that play across its surface. This gives the curtain a look that is reminiscent of linen.

Frost

Transparent Frost has a shiny, crisp expression. Unusual for a transparent curtain, Frost offers a very clear view of what is outside the window.

Haze

Haze is closely woven and translucent. Thanks to small irregularities in its yarn, it is reminiscent of cotton or wool.
